

622

5 Galley type for
6
7 EAC: Encyclopedia of the American Constitution
8
9 Article ID Number: 361

10
11
12
13
14

SHAW v. RENO AND ITS PROGENY
509 U.S. 630 (1993)

16 North Carolina is subject to the preclearance provisions
17 of section 5 of the VOTING RIGHT ACT OF 1965 [4]. The 18 Voting Rights Section of the Civil Rights Division of the 19 U.S. Department of Justice (DOJ) rejected a North Caro-
20 lina congressional plan that provided for only a single 21 black-majority congressional district, insisting that two 22 such districts be drawn and suggesting several hypotheti-
23 cal configurations. A resubmitted plan with two majority-24 minority districts was given DOJ preclearance, but the 25 new district in that plan looked nothing like any of the 26 DOJ suggestions. The proposed North Carolina Twelfth
27 Congressional District stretched 200 miles, included parts 28 of numerous cities, and achieved contiguity of some of its 29 parts only via connection along a single road, Interstate 30 85.

31 Because a majority of Supreme Court Justices, includ-
32 ing SANDRA DAY O'CONNOR [3,I,II], had previously seemed 33 willing to assent to race-conscious ELECTORAL DISTRICTING
34 [II] to safeguard the fundamental right to vote, the Court's 35 5-4 decision invalidating North Carolina's districting plan
36 in Shaw v. Reno (Shaw I) came as a surprise to many 37 experts. In a MAJORITY OPINION [3] authored by O'Connor,
38 and joined by WILLIAM H. REHNQUIST [3,I,II], ANTONIN
39 SCALIA [I,II], ANTHONY M. KENNEDY [I,II], and CLARENCE
40 THOMAS [II], the Court explained that it was troubled by 41 the peculiar configuration of the Twelfth Congressional 42 District, the least compact in the nation, and by the history
43 that led to its creation, in which race appeared to play a 44 major role. The majority also enunciated a new legal stan-45 dard for legislative action on REPRESENTATION [3], in which 46 an excessive reliance on race as a criterion in drawing elec-
47 toral district was unconstitutional. In plans in which race 48 was implicated, states were now required to prove that 49 there was a COMPELLING STATE INTEREST [I] in establishing 50 the plan and that the districts were "narrowly tailored" to 51 serve that interest.

52 While Shaw I merely remanded the North Carolina
53 congressional plan to the district court for consideration
54 under the new legal standard, Shaw v. Hunt (Shaw II)
55 (1996), also decided 5-4 with the same lineup of Justices,
56 declared North Carolina's congressional plan to be uncon-

623

57 stitutional, rejecting claims that aspects of its peculiar con-
 58 figurations could better be assigned to political than to 59 racial considerations. Even before Shaw II, however,
 60 Shaw I inspired similar challenges to race-based district-
 61 ing in other jurisdictions.

62 Most Shaw-type challenges came in jurisdictions that 63 fell under the section 5 preclearance provisions (affecting 64 sixteen states in whole or in part, including all states in 65 the deep South). In covered jurisdictions, the failure to 66 create as many majority-minority districts as the DOJ
 67 viewed as required by the act risked a preclearance denial
 68 and time-consuming litigation that was unattractive to pol-
 69 iticians. By 1998, lower courts in states such as Louisiana,
 70 Georgia, South Carolina, and Texas had rejected plans
 71 precleared by DOJ; and when these cases were appealed
 72 to the Supreme Court the lower court decision was left 73 standing, as in MILLER v. JOHNSON (1995) [II]. In these 74 decisions the courts refused to excuse the majority-
 75 minority districts created to secure section 5 preclearance,
 76 and some of the opinions chastised the DOJ for its exces-
 77 sive zeal in pursuing race-conscious districting. Only in 78 California were plans sustained against a Shaw-type chal-
 79 lenge, by a PER CURLAM [3] decision upholding a lower 80 court. But, in that state, the plans under challenge were 81 drawn by former state judges and plausibly defended as 82 fully meeting traditional districting criteria.

83 Shaw I and subsequent decisions met a mixed reaction
 84 among legal scholars. The most important legal criticisms
 85 of the opinions concerned the logic underlying the court's 86 broadening of STANDING [4,II] to sue to include voters out-
 87 side the challenged district; the Court's failure to specify
 88 the exact nature of the constitutional harm to white voters
 89 whose votes were not diluted; the murkiness and inherent 90 judicial unmanageability of discerning when race is a "pre-91 dominant factor"; and the use of a sledgehammer (a new 92 constitutional standard) to solve a problem that could have 93 been dealt with merely by tightening the criteria for 94 enforcement of the Voting Rights Act. Ironically, the 95 black-majority districts in question were actually more 96 racially integrated than the white-majority districts in their 97 states. Reaction to Shaw in the CIVIL RIGHTS [I,I,II] com-
 98 munity was more visceral, as some saw the Shaw line of 99 cases as a further retreat from the Second Civil Rights
 100 Reconstruction (that of the 1960s), paralleling the betrayal
 101 of the First Reconstruction (in the late 1880s).

102 BERNARD GROFMAN

103 Bibliography

- 105 DAVIDSON, CHANDLER and GROFMAN, BERNARD, 1994 The Quiet
 106 Revolution in the South: The Impact of the Voting Right Act,
 107 1965-1990 Princeton, N.J.: Princeton University Press.
 108 GROFMAN, BERNARD, ed. 1998 Race and Redistricting in the 109 1990s. New York: Agathon Press.
 110 GROFMAN, BERNARD and DAVIDSON, CHANDLER 1992 Contro-
 111 versies in Minority Voting: The Voting Right Act of 1965 in 112 Perspective. Washington, D.C.: The Brookings Institution.
 113 ISSACHAROFF, SAMUEL and KARLAN, PAMELA S. 1998 Commen-
 114 tary: Standing and Misunderstanding in Voting Rights Law.
 115 Harvard Law Review 11:2276-2292.
 116 LOWENSTEIN, DANIEL HAYS 1998 You Don't Have to Be Liberal

624

117 to Hate the Racial Gerrymandering Cases. Stanford Law
118 Review 50:779-835.
119 PILDES, RICHARD and NIEMI, RICHARD 1993 Expressive Harms,
120 'Bizarre Districts,' and Voting Rights: Evaluating Election-
121 District Appearance After Shaw v. Reno. Michigan Law
122 Review 92:483-587.
123
124